No tuition NPS courses become more popular

by JOC Walton Whittaker

The Naval Postgraduate School at Monterey is offering 100 courses by correspondence this year as enrollment reaches record levels.

More than 5,000 courses are expected to be sent this year for mostly technical courses to military and civilian personnel throughout the country. In 1982 about 3,200 courses were shipped.

"All the courses require a lot of determination on the part of the student," Bob Zucker, director of Continuing Education, said. "He must really want to do it."

The correspondence courses are taken primarily by naval officers preparing to enter the school, but are available to both enlisted and officer personnel and government employees. There is no tuition cost for the courses. Students pay only for textbooks. Study guides are also provided.

"Most courses can be taken for credit but we won't enroll a student for credit unless we're sure that he's serious," Zucker said. "Many will enroll with good intentions but find it's more work than they expected. These courses require some serious study."

Of 5,200 courses sent out last year, most were for review purposes with 808 actually taken for credit. Of those, 538 were completed. "That's a good completion rate," Zucker said.

Zucker said the courses follow a Personalized System of Instruction (PSI) in which each is actually a mini-course broken into smaller units. Each course is accompanied by a detailed study guide which contains learning objectives, study procedures, study questions and a self test.

The Best in Academic Professionalism and Service to the Navy

On Sept. 1, 1982, the Secretary of the Navy appointed Dr. David Allen Schradly as provost and academic dean of the Naval Postgraduate School for a term of five years. On Aug. 31, 1987 this term will be completed.

It is proper to reflect upon these five years and, in addition, the preceding two years during which Dean Schradly had served as acting provost.

This seven year period was marked by Dean Schradly's commitment, energy, and interest in this school.

It is most appropriate to take this opportunity to recognize the very valuable contributions Dean Schradly has made during a period of continuous growth of the school. His efforts have required a wise and careful sense of development and planning, and an integration of the best in academic professionalism and service to the Navy.

The provost's prime responsibility is in academic matters across the board -- from recruiting scholarly faculty, developing faculty, supporting vigorous research, setting the highest standards of teaching excellence, carefully allocating resources to meet needed requirements, to being an eloquent spokesman throughout academic and governmental circles for graduate education for the officer corps of U.S. and allied armed services.

In all of these endeavors, Dean Schradly has made a significant contribution.

The fostering and implementation of the lab improvement package was the most recent of Dean Schradly's many notable accomplishments. He has also provided me with thorough and sound counsel during my past year of association.

Dean Schradly originally joined the faculty of the Postgraduate School as an assistant professor in the Operations Research Department after receiving his Ph.D. from Case Western Reserve Institute in 1965.

With the exception of the years 1970-71, when he was associate program director of the operations research branch of the Office of Naval Research, he has served directly at the school -- serving as an academic officer at all levels of responsibility.

He has held positions as a professor, academic associate, department chairman, Dean of Information and Policy Sciences, Dean of Academic Planning, and Provost.

He departs this September for a sabbatical in which he is going to be able to further his professional skills. He will return to the school to continue making contributions to the Navy.

I know I join all at the Naval Postgraduate School, and particularly the faculty with whom he has been associated, in wishing him every success during a well deserved and important sabbatical period.

Dean Schradly, we all wish you great scholarly pursuit and reward.

The intent is to provide students with clear statements on what they are expected to learn, explicit instructions on how to study the material, and feedback that tells them if they have acquired the knowledge.

Communication programs reviewed

Rear Adm. Roger Rich, director of naval communications, will review the communications curricula next Monday, Aug. 31, and Tuesday, Sept. 1, in Sp-101A.

Interested students and faculty are encouraged to observe the review proceedings, said Cdr. John Donnelly, Electronics and Communications Programs curricular officer. Telecommunications Systems Management will be reviewed on Monday, 9:45 a.m. to 3:15 p.m., Communications Engineering on Tuesday, 8:00 a.m. to 11:45 a.m.

Rich will address all communications students in In-122 at 3:15 on Monday, Aug. 31.

Since the program began 11 years ago, its popularity has continually increased. In the last five years alone the number of courses ordered has increased from 3,200 to the current 5,200, and new courses are being added yearly.

Correspondence courses are not the sole item of business for the growing Continuing Education Office. The office also offers 30 short courses each year, one- to two-week classes taught off- and on-campus, and last year administered 50 on-campus conferences.

About 1,500 people attended last year's short courses, while more than 6,000 people participated in the NPS conferences.
